As of May 25 2020, RockSat-C launch has been delayed to June 2021. Current RockSat-C 2020 teams are guaranteed a spot on the rocket for 2021. If your team is choosing to stay with the program your fees from this year will be kept and put towards cost for launch in 2021. If your team is not staying with the program you will be given a full refund.

Please email koehler@colorado.edu with your teams final decision by August 1st, 2020.

The following explains how the year will look in terms of presentations and progress updates given various scenarios for teams.

Case 1 - same team members, same experiment
In the event that your team composition has remained mostly the same (with the exception of a few team members leaving or new students joining) and you are flying the same experiment, we will check in with teams occasionally for major reviews but will most likely not require teams to complete all reviews. Rather than reviews, we will probably have progress updates with these teams to stay informed on the experiment and touch base with teams before major Wallops reviews to ensure we are relaying the correct information, but overall we do not expect teams to redo presentations.*

Case 2 - same team members, different experiment
If your team composition has remained mostly the same but you are changing your experiment, we will treat this as a new experiment. Therefore we expect teams to complete all reviews and progress updates.

Case 3 - different team, same experiment
If your team is completely different but flying the same experiment, we will require the team to complete a majority (but not all) of the reviews. The thought process here is that teams that are new to the program should gain exposure to how the program runs and should have some practice putting together professional presentations related to their experiment. This will also hopefully help these students to become the new experts on the project.

Case 4 - different team, different experiment
In the case of a different team and different experiment, we expect the team to participate in all reviews and progress updates.

Case 5 - decision to not fly on RockSat-C 2021
If your team decides not to return for RockSat-C 2021, we will meet with your team to discuss refunding and hope to see an IFF from you all for RockSat-C 2022!

*Reviews required for each team are subject to change
